Brandy,

I remember the day you were born. I was waiting at home impatiently to find out if your mom had a girl or a boy and was over the moon excited to be an aunt for the 2nd time. Little did I know what a beautiful woman you would grow up to be and what a close bond we would share as friends in adulthood! I'm sorry that we left things unsaid and undone. I always took it for granted that we would figure it out one day. It's too late to tell you in person that I love you but I hope you knew that no matter what. You're with your mom now and pretty much the remainder of our family who I miss all so dearly. We will see each other again one day when I get there to join the celebration in heaven you all must be having. You're back in your mother's arms again. Give them all big hugs and kisses for me. When I look at your pictures I think about a quote from Steel Magnolia's "She will always be young and always be beautiful". Rest In Peace.
